About KPLA

Craig Kayser is principal of the Kayser Pierce Literary Agency. He also serves as editorial director for TrueWind Press and was until recently managing director of History Speaks, a firm specializing in the use of oral history techniques for company content-building and promotion.

Craig has worked in the editorial departments of Departures, Interview, Golf & Travel and Harper's Bazaar, and previously served as director of research with Gina Luria Walker & Associates, a firm providing research consulting on history and architectural history.

He pursued his interest in urban history, urban design and urban affairs as a Fellow at the Municipal Art Society, and was guest editor of MAS's The Livable City. An inveterate generalist, Craig studied architecture at the Cooper Union before receiving a BA in Philosophy from Columbia. He lives in Chapel Hill, North Carolina.
